DEAR FRIENDS,

This is Sir Isaac Newton’s first law of motion. He was talking about inanimate objects, of course, but the words seem to apply well to our own lives. We’ve all had moments when we’ve felt like we’re in constant motion, moving at a pace beyond our control. We’ve also had moments when we’ve felt stuck in place and welcomed a push in a new direction.

Whatever the season in life, this truth holds: We stop or step forward only because something moves us to do so.

This year’s Crossroads features members of our Methodist Health System Foundation family sharing about the “forces” that have moved them, not only in their personal and professional lives but also in their service and stewardship to Methodist. Some are motivated to save lives, while others desire to meet the needs of the underserved. Some are inspired by the memory of a loved one, others by a deep faith.

But in these pages, you’ll find more than these stories. You’ll also find a challenge to discern for yourself what moves you. The answer is personal, but it might reveal, as it has for so many others, that what moves you every day also moves us here at Methodist. Providing for others, serving a purpose greater than ourselves, achieving excellence, remembering those who have gone before us — these are all part of who we are.

Whatever moves you to be a part of our Methodist family, we’re grateful to serve alongside you. Thank you for helping us to move North Texas toward a brighter, healthier future.

SERVING THE POOR

Ever since their youth, Carolyn and David Neal have had a heart for Methodist Health System’s Golden Cross ministry, which provides charity care to the unemployed and underinsured.

“As we were growing up, we knew many people who were in unfortunate situations, and Golden Cross was always there for them. This ministry moves us. No one should have to go without the medications and care they need, and we’re grateful to play a role in ensuring that they don’t.”

HONORING MY FATHER

As a little girl, Sylvia Hargrave, MD, FACS, worked in her father’s dental office after school. Sylvester Hargrave, DDS, encouraged his daughter’s love of science and unknowingly inspired her pursuit of medicine.

“He died when I was 14, and I think of him every day. When I was invited to give to the Charles A. Sammons Tower campaign for emergency and trauma care, I knew I wanted to give the same amount my dad needed to buy his first office building. It felt good to come full circle — that his daughter was able to use that same amount to give back to someone else, in this case a medical community that has supported me and that is now verified in Level I trauma care.”

Ophthalmologist, Methodist Dallas Medical Center

WHAT moves us

Inspiration to give is personal. Here are just a few ways our donors have been moved to give.
LEAVING A LEGACY

A desire to get involved in her community is what led Mary Cochran to give her time to the BrightER capital campaign committee for the Charles A. Sammons Tower a few years ago. But a desire to honor the memory of her late cousin, Bradley Taylor Couch, is what led her to become a donor.

“I wanted to honor Bradley in some way, but it’s hard to find something special enough to honor someone as giving and kind as he was. Having learned how much Methodist Health System is a pillar of light in the community, I knew supporting the BrightER campaign was a great way to let his legacy of helping others in need live on.”

SERVANT LEADERSHIP

Allie Beth Allman’s real estate background has connected her to people all over Dallas–Fort Worth, but among the most impressive people she’s met are the leaders and physicians at Methodist Health System.

“I thought, ‘If these people are sold on Methodist and if they feel like they can do good here, then there must be something great about it.’ And they were right. The health system is run so professionally, and I was so impressed with the doctors and their efforts to provide top-level care. Now my goal is to make my contacts aware of Methodist and all it has done for Dallas.”

On Oct. 16, 2013, Corey Dooley, then only 15 years old, learned how far he’d go for someone he loves. It’s the night that domestic violence changed his life.

As his mother, Nicole Rishard, pulled into their garage that evening, Corey’s stepfather snuck in behind the car and shot at her, Corey, and her younger son, Cody. Corey instinctively turned to shelter his mother and took four bullets — two to the back and two to the left hip. Another bullet hit Nicole in the arm.

Corey almost died, but the Methodist Dallas Medical Center trauma team, led that night by Michael S. Truitt, MD, FACS, was determined to save his life. Two years later, Corey is living his dream of playing college football. He heads off to Concordia University this fall.

Dr. Truitt says Methodist Health System Foundation plays an integral role in stories like Corey’s, particularly with the new Charles A. Sammons Tower dedicated to emergency, trauma, and critical care. “The Sammons Tower was a huge investment in resources that has given us everything we need to be a successful Level I Trauma Center,” Dr. Truitt says. “You never know when another Corey Dooley is going to roll into the trauma bay, but we’re more prepared than ever if he does.”

“Proverbs 4:25 says, ‘Look straight ahead, and fix your eyes on what lies before you.’ That scripture encourages me to use my experience to help others. I hope my story reaches millions of people and shows them the impact of domestic violence.”

“I love being able to care for people at the most critical time in their lives and then see them not just go back to what they were doing before but excel and thrive beyond my wildest expectations.”

For some people, knowing that someone is in need is enough to inspire them to give of their time and resources. That was the case for both Nita and John Ford and Elaine and Michael Redden, longtime supporters of Methodist Health System Foundation.

The Fords grew up in Oak Cliff. They raised their children there and knew many of the physicians at what is now Methodist Dallas Medical Center. When they learned in the mid-1990s that the hospital’s digestive diseases program was in need of support, the couple didn’t hesitate. Thanks to their generosity, that program has grown to include more physicians and technology, education facilities, a gastroenterology fellowship, and now the newly established Methodist Digestive Institute.

As for the Reddens, they couldn’t resist a chance to meet the needs of the underserved, a cornerstone of Methodist Health System’s mission. Through the Methodist Dallas Golden Cross Academic Clinic, the Foundation supports various programs to help the underserved in our community, and just last year, Methodist provided $109.2 million in unreimbursed charity care.

“In 2003, Pete Schenkel strongly suggested it would be worthwhile to get involved with Methodist, that I would not be disappointed,” Michael recalls. “I agree with him more today than I did 13 years ago. The closer you get, the more you see and the more convinced you become.”

“We already had a lot of confidence in the people here from our friendships, but that confidence has continued to grow over the years. It’s overwhelming to see the compassion and Christian ethics brought to patient care at Methodist.”

NITA FORD AND JOHN FORD
Methodist Health System Foundation Board of Trustees

“The commitment of the hospital to serve the less fortunate is the primary driver that attracts me. To the people at Methodist, it’s clearly visible that this is more than a job. It’s a mission and a ministry.”

MICHAEL REDDEN
Former Vice Chairman, Grand Bank
Back in March 2013, a group gathered at Methodist Mansfield Medical Center to discuss the construction of a much-needed new patient care tower. But this wasn’t a day to talk about building plans or budgets or timelines. It was a day for creating a covenant.

“The entire team was involved, from the Methodist Mansfield leaders to the design consultants to the constructors,” recalls Dominick Calabrese, operations manager at The Beck Group. “We formed a culture where every decision revolved around what’s right for the patient.”

This culture resonated with 11 of the contracting companies in particular: Alliance Glass and Mirror, Ltd.; Anton Cabinetry; The Beck Group; Capform Inc.; Cummings Electrical; DD&F Commercial Flooring; Impact Professional Group; Lasco Acoustics and Drywall, Inc.; RTKL Associates Inc.; TDIndustries; and WSP/ccrd. Together they made a generous donation to the Tower Two Capital Campaign in honor of Mansfield City Manager Clayton Chandler.

“In our business, we have the opportunity to build a lot of really cool projects, but every so often, we get to build communities. That community focus is where the mission of our business and the mission of Methodist Mansfield come together.”

TIM MCNEW
Senior Vice President, TDIndustries

“Cummings Electrical has four cornerstones, one of which is ‘Do the right thing,’ and part of doing the right thing is giving back to our community with our time and our resources. In this case, that meant going the extra mile and giving back to a project that really impacts so many lives in our community.”

SCOTT SMITH
Vice President, Cummings Electrical

“If you walk through the hospital with Methodist Mansfield President John Phillips, you see he has a passion about delivering the best care possible to patients. His attitude was infectious, and I saw our group donation as a way of supporting him and his mission to serve.”

To say that Tarrant County’s population is on the rise is an understatement. When Methodist Mansfield Medical Center opened its doors in late 2006, the county had 1.663 million residents. The projection for its 2015 population was 1.96 million. That’s almost 300,000 more people in need of medical care than a decade ago.

Moved to make sure that Methodist Mansfield had the space and technology to continue to serve this and the surrounding growing communities, the Methodist Health System board of directors approved a $118 million expansion of the hospital. The 208,000-square-foot, 118-bed Tower Two, completed last December, expanded the hospital’s economic impact in Mansfield to $293 million. The tower also features the brand-new Amon G. Carter Foundation Heart and Vascular Center. Named for one of the tower’s most generous benefactors, the center gives a stronger presence to the hospital’s award-winning cardiac care.
“The Amon G. Carter Foundation commends Methodist for its vision and commitment to establish Methodist Mansfield 10 years ago. We were pleased to support the Tower Two Capital Campaign and look forward to seeing the nearby communities thrive with Methodist Mansfield at their service.”

The Methodist Mansfield Medical Center Tower Two grand opening celebration on Dec. 17, 2015, included community and health system leaders, as well as many donors to Methodist Health System Foundation, without whom this facility — and the lifesaving, life-changing care it brings — would not be possible. Here is a brief look back at that day and some of the donors who were moved to support Tower Two.

Steve Van Amburgh, David McAtee, and Bruce Sammis all came to know Methodist Health System through the Robert S. Folsom Leadership Award. The reason they’ve stayed connected, however, is because they stand for service.

Steve puts it best when he says, “The thing that inspires me is the same thing that inspires everyone at Methodist Health System: When you get up every day, all you really want to do is serve others well.”

While all three gentlemen have served in various capacities both in the corporate world and in the community, they’ve now chosen to direct their support and service toward healthcare. “In law and in business, we embrace the same sort of concepts as in the healthcare world, but it’s never on an issue as important as life or death,” David says. “There is no area more interesting and, in some ways, more challenging than healthcare, especially healthcare for the underserved.”

“I like to hope that I live on this earth not to be served but to serve others. I see that same philosophy embodied at Methodist. The people there truly live out their value of Servant Heart and embody what it means to be selfless and humble.”

STEVE VAN AMBURGH
CEO, KDC Real Estate Development & Investments

“Over the next 20 years, what could be more important to our society than getting healthcare right? It really motivates me to be a part of charting Methodist’s course.”

Methodist Health System Board of Directors

“Methodist has a powerful influence on our communities, and I want to do everything in my power to help them remain at the forefront of healthcare and support their mission to improve and save lives.”

“Bob Folsom impacted our community in many ways, but one way he directly impacted me was to open my eyes and my mind to the idea of volunteering and to serve our community in public office. To this day, I’m inspired by his example and am humbled to be honored with an award bearing his name.”

JACK LOWE JR.
2015 Robert S. Folsom Leadership Award Recipient
“This smiling, laughing, Princess Bride–loving gentleman has been known a time or two to embrace the thrill of victory.”

Gary Cogill used these words to describe Jack Lowe Jr., the 2015 Robert S. Folsom Leadership Award recipient, at the Oct. 14, 2015, event in his honor. The words reflect Jack’s jovial nature and his love of movies, but more important, they describe a man who knows that there are some fights you cannot — in fact, must not — lose. One of those is the fight for a child’s healthy future.

“I have long been an advocate of education and of giving everyone a fair chance to fully participate in the possibilities our wonderful country provides,” Jack said in his acceptance speech that evening. “Without interventions, children of poverty are much less well prepared than their non-poverty peers.”

Because of Jack’s desire to overcome some of the hardships children face, the funds netted from the event in his honor — a generous $1.3 million — benefit two programs at the Methodist Dallas Medical Center Golden Cross Academic Clinic. The first program is CenteringPregnancy®, which has successfully lowered the preterm birth rate of the young mothers participating to 5.7 percent since it started in 2008. The second is the new CenteringParenting®, which will help first-year parents take the proper steps for their children’s well-being.

Among the key supporters of this event were our Leadership Circle donors. Having generously donated $10,000 or more, these donors were invited to a private patron party on Oct. 12 in Century Hall at Old Parkland.

The Folsom event welcomed a record 820 guests to the Hilton Anatole’s Grand Ballroom, where they were treated to an evening personalized with all things Jack. A tribute video titled Jackman was a clever play off an iconic comic book hero and showcased how Jack had achieved victories in his professional life and community service. His grandchildren even donned Jackman capes and masks and performed a dance routine to celebrate their grandfather’s award.

The G60 model of care takes a multi-disciplinary, collaborative approach to enhancing hospital care for older adults who suffer a traumatic injury, such as a fracture or head injury. With specialized staff and facilities, we can better meet the healthcare needs of older adults and enhance their quality of life.

As of publication.

TRANSPLANT

Of the hospitals in the Dallas area, The Liver Institute at Methodist Dallas Medical Center has the best outcomes for patients receiving liver transplants.* The hospital is also home to the new General Surgery Epicenter by Intuitive Surgical, where we’re training surgeons in robot-assisted procedures, including those used in transplants.

As of publication.

SEXUAL ASSAULT NURSE EXAMINER (SANE) PROGRAM

The SANE program provides sexual assault patients ages 14 and older with comprehensive services, including sensitive medical and trauma care, no-cost court-admissible forensic examinations, and options for counseling and reporting to legal authorities.

CENTERINGPREGNANCY® AND CENTERINGPARENTING®

CenteringPregnancy provides at-risk pregnant women with healthcare, education, and moral support to help prevent preterm birth. Similarly, CenteringParenting helps these young parents navigate their first year of parenthood. The outcome is healthier children and healthier families.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN’S SERVICES

In 2015 alone, physicians at Methodist Health System delivered 9,290 newborns. Ensuring the safety of these infants and their mothers is a top priority, prompting continual investment in the Level III Neonatal Intensive Care Units at Methodist Dallas and Methodist Mansfield Medical Centers.

MD COLLEGE AND CAREER PATHWAYS

This program aims to give Dallas County high school students volunteer, mentoring, and educational opportunities in a hospital environment to better prepare them for college and future careers in healthcare, including those requiring mid-level skills.

NEUROSURGERY

Whether it’s relieving back pain, removing deadly brain tumors, repairing aneurysms, or caring for traumatic brain injuries, the physicians at the Methodist Brain and Spine Institute are key to the well-being of our community.

NURSING EDUCATION

Ensuring that aspiring nurses acquire a high-quality education benefits patients both at Methodist Health System and across Dallas–Fort Worth. We are also dedicated to helping our current nursing staff develop their expertise with advanced degrees and the highest standard of continuing education.

BREAST HEALTH

We hope to expand the reach of our mobile mammography services, which bring lifesaving mammograms to uninsured and underinsured women at their workplaces and in their communities. In addition, acquiring advanced medical technology helps us to remain strong in the battle against breast cancer.
